

The Cruise of the Anarctic to the South Polar Regions

Excerpt: It is not pretended that the appearance of this book is justified by any extraordinary hardships or feats of endurance and fortitude on the part of the members of the late Antarctic Expedition, of which I had the honour to be the promoter and manager abroad; but as we had the good fortune to penetrate to latitudes only passed by two previous explorers, Sir James Ross and Captain Weddell, and as we further succeeded in reaching the mainland of the great Antarctic Continent, never before trodden by human foot, I hope that my readers will find the history of the undertaking not wholly devoid of interest. Our discovery in Antarctica of vegetation, hitherto believed non-existent, and the specimens detached from the rocks of the mainland, constitute the meagre additions to natural science gained by the expedition; but our experiences in the Southern ice-fields, and our rough meteorological observations, recorded in my narrative, or in the accompanying extracts of the ships log, may also be of some value to the scientific world, as well as to those who may contemplate further exploration in the same regions. The report of our whaling and sealing will have some interest for practical men, and although we were spared, as already intimated, the physical sufferings from cold and privation at the price of which so many Arctic explorers have bought their fame, I hope that the story of our narrow escapes from shipwreck, our adventures amongst the ice, and in the hunting of whales and seals, may prove attractive even to the general reader.
