

Imports From China and Food Safety Issues

The U.S. Food and Drug Administrations (FDA) increased attention to food imports from China is an indicator of safety concerns as imported food becomes more common in the United States. U.S. food imports from China more than tripled in value between 2001 and 2008. Addressing safety risks associated with these imports is difficult because of the vast array of products from China, Chinas weak enforcement of food safety standards, its heavy use of agricultural chemicals, and its considerable environmental pollution. FDA refusals of food shipments from China suggest recurring problems with filth, unsafe additives, labeling (typically introduced in food processing and handling), and veterinary drug residues in fish and shellfish (introduced at the farm).
