

Journal of a Voyage of Discovery to the Arctic Regions: In His Majesty's Ships Hecla and Griper, in the Years 1819 & 1820 (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Journal of a Voyage of Discovery to the Arctic Regions: In His Majesty's Ships Hecla and Griper, in the Years 1819 & 1820 The object of the Expedition, of which the following pages contain a brief Narrative, is already so generally well known, that it requires little to be said upon it in the way of preface. Before we sailed on the first Expedition to the Polar Seas, great hopes were entertained, from the reports of several masters of Greenland ships, and other persons, that some great change had taken place in the Arctic regions; in consequence of which they were expected to be found navigable to a greater extent than they had been for some centuries past.
