

The Land Aflame

The Land Aflame is a novel of the American Civil War written in the roman a clef style. The well-researched plot and action is based upon the lives of the people and the events of the time when the nation was at war with itself. There were stars in both the Union and Confederate flags representing Missouri. The state was torn apart by inner conflict. The action of the story opens in the northeast corner of Arkansas at and near the town of Pocahontas where Sterling Price, former governor of Missouri, now a Confederate General, was preparing to move his brigades of mounted troops into Missouri to seize the areas then occupied by the Union army. The time was September, 1864. The work is written omnisciently with action that tends to flow between the numerous characters and locations, yet the principal male protagonist, Cole Logan, (and later his brother, Ben) is most instrumental in the movement of the plot. The story has a number of sub-plots.
