Not illustrated. 1867 Excerpt: ... field. To be sure, after all, I would be at liberty to modify and change the course of policy as future events might make a change necessary. I have not maintained silence from any want of real anxiety. It is a good thing that there is no more than anxiety, for there is nothing, going wrong. It is a consoling circumstance that when we look out there is nothing that really hurts anybody. We entertain different views upon political questions, but nobody is suffering any thing. This is a most consoling circumstance, and from it I judge that all we want is time and patience, and a reliance on that God who has never forsaken this people. On the 14th of February, Mr. Lincoln proceeded to Pittsburg. At Steubenville, on the route, in reply to an address by Judge Lloyd in behalf of the crowd present, he said: I fear that the great confidence placed in my ability is unfounded. Indeed, I am sure it is. Encompassed by vast difficulties, as I am, nothing shall be wanted on my part, if sustained by the American people and God. I believe the devotion to the Constitution is equally great on both sides of the river. It is only the different understanding of that instrument that causes difficulty. The only dispute is, What are their rights? If the majority should not rule who should be the judge? Where is such judge to be found? We should all be bound by the majority of the American people--if not, then the minority must control. Would that be right? Would it be just or generous? Assuredly not. He reiterated, the majority should rule. If he adopted a wrong policy, then the opportunity to condemn him would occur in four years time. Then I can be turned out and a better man with better views put in my place. He remained at Pit...
