

Septembers Balloon

Description Septembers Balloon is a novel written in first person and told through the eyes of Susan Nolan, the thirty-five year old narrator. Susan is afflicted with anxiety and panic, and struggles with her recently closed company, loss of financial independence and a stale and isolating marriage. A childhood loss taunts her additionally, and with no emotional support from her husband or from her wealthy and disconnected family, she spirals into depression. She is the mother of her six-year-old daughter named September, who sends a message to God, by balloon, driven by her innate and child-like faith. Septembers parents, Susan and Matt Nolan are at first amused and delighted with their daughters idea of sending her rainbow drawing to God as a thank you for the rainbows hes given to her, until their small town, several weeks later, witness a rainbow of phenomenal proportions and contemplate theyve witnessed a miracle. As the story progresses, so do the balloons as one becomes larger when Susan, having an unbearable fear of heights, schedules a hot air balloon ride for her daughters birthday. This is a fiction novel, however, Susans emotional disease is a constant current throughout the story and the symptoms and experiences deriving from her illness told accurately and honestly from her viewpoint. The storys interesting momentum throughout will grasp the readers attention. Sadness, humor, conflict, and unexplainable occurrences from Septembers wonderment and faithful belief for answers spawns hope and encourage change for her parents Susan and Matt. About the Author Kathy Flanary Nelson was born at Camp Lejeune, NC and later relocated with her young military family to attend first grade in Alexandria, Virginia. Shortly after, they moved back to North Carolina where she has lived most of her life. She found she loved creative writing the day her boss asked her to write an employment recommendation for an employee she hardly knew. She completed the project that night and turned it into her boss the next day who astonishingly praised her writing skills. It also landed a company employee a promotion, but no raises for herself as she recalls. Kathy achieved plenty and enjoyed diversity and challenge in the workplace before she found her entrepreneurial spirit, then started a competitive business. She contemplated obstacles along the way but never thought shed become expecting with her first born only eight months into her new endeavor. With a newborn business and a newborn child, she found herself pulled between the two but managed to continue her business, though downscaled from her original goal, to allow working from home and to care for her daughter during the early years. Kathy will tell you that it is a mothers personal choice to leave an outside career for stay-at-home motherhood and that you cant fight what youre heart is telling you. She will also tell you that life-changing and stressful situations in life will also uncover new strengths and talents. It was through that time, when she altered her lifestyle dramatically, that she wrote her first poem, This is Life, reflecting the feelings of a new mother. She followed This is Life, with a collection of over eighty poems with seventy-five of them published. Added to her work since then are five childrens picture books, one of which became published in 2008, entitled, You Make Me Want to Sing, (Music Stories), two novels, one for young adults and one for womens literature, entitled, Septembers Balloon, which is coming soon and like the majority of Ms. Nelsons work was inspired by her daughter. She is currently working on her third novel and doesnt intend to stop the venue of writing that gave her refuge and one shes grown to love.
