

Silent Enemy

It has been found that when land animals survive with small levels of pesticides in their bodies, they give birth to their young with concentrations strong enough to kill them. Are we running the same risk with our offspring passing on to them the irreversible breakdown of cell and marrow that we, as adult mammals, have been able thus far to withstand? Children born with strong immune systems may escape for a time, but as toxins proliferate and our food and water become ever more contaminated, the next generation may not be so fortunate.
