[From Wikipedia] A Tom Swifty (or Tom Swiftie) is a phrase in which a quoted sentence is linked by a pun to the manner in which it is attributed. Tom Swifties may be considered a type of wellerism. The name comes from the Tom Swift series of books (1910-present), similar in many ways to the better-known Hardy Boys and Nancy Drew series, and, like them, produced by the Stratemeyer Syndicate. In this series, the young scientist hero underwent adventures involving rocket ships, ray-guns and other things he had invented. A stylistic idiosyncrasy of at least some books in this series was that the author, Victor Appleton, went to great trouble to avoid repetition of the unadorned word said; elegant variation used a different quotative verb, or modifying adverbial words or phrases. Since many adverbs end in ly this kind of pun was originally called a Tom Swiftly, the archetypal example being We must hurry, said Tom Swiftly. At some point, this kind of humor was called a Tom Swifty, and that name is now more prevalent. Tom Swifties first came to prominence in the United States with the 1963 publication of the book Tom Swifties by Paul Pease and Bill McDonough.
